Omnibus and Segregated Account Offering for European Union (EU) Markets

Background

Under the Central Securities Depository Regulation (CSDR) Article 38, CSDs are obliged to offer their participants the choice between Omnibus and Segregated Account types. Where BNY Mellon is a direct participant of a CSDR regulated CSD, BNY Mellon is obliged to offer the choice between Omnibus Accounts and Segregated Accounts to its clients and publicly disclose the levels of protection and the costs associated with the different levels of segregation.

1. Where can information be found on the levels of asset protection and insolvency?

Information on the levels of asset protection for each account type and the insolvency laws of each jurisdiction where BNY Mellon operates in the European Union can be found in the Article 38 disclosure documents. The disclosure documents can be obtained on the CSDR webpage.

2. What is the difference in asset protection between account types?

In general, the different account types do not materially differ in providing asset protection for participants or underlying clients. Please refer to the Article 38 disclosure document for further information.

3. What different types of account are offered by CSDs?

CSDs offer three types of account:

- Firm accounts
- Client Omnibus accounts
- Client Segregated accounts

Client assets can be held in either a Client Omnibus account or a Client Segregated account at the CSD. BNY Mellon typically holds client assets in a Client Omnibus account at the CSD. Client Segregated accounts are available upon request, and can be discussed with your Relationship representative.

4. Is the process for account opening different where BNY Mellon is indirect (i.e. not a CSD participant?)

BNY Mellon offers a range of account types to meet your needs across all European Union (EU) markets. Details of Account Opening Procedures can be found via NEXEN® or Workbench, or can be discussed with the Relationship representative, alternatively you can inquire here.

5. Is this a regulatory requirement?

Yes. The CSDR (909/2014) is a major development for the European market to enhance the safety and soundness of the financial system. Together with the European Market Infrastructure Regulation on derivatives, central counterparties and trade repositories (EMIR), which entered into force on 16 August 2012 alongside the markets in financial instruments directive (MiFID), it will form a framework in which securities infrastructures (trading venues, central counterparties, and central securities depositories) are subject to common rules at a European level.

6. When is Article 38 effective?

Article 38 comes into effect when each CSD receives its CSDR licence. This is dependent upon the National Competent Authority of the CSD, and each CSD will notify participants of their upcoming authorisation date.

7. What is the timeline for BNY Mellon to offer account type choice in each direct market?

BNY Mellon offers Client Omnibus and Client Segregated account choice where we are a direct CSD participant in the EU markets. Where CSDs do not offer a Client Omnibus or Client Segregated account choice, this will be made available when each CSD becomes approved, in accordance with the approval mechanism set out in the regulation. Outside of the EU, BNY Mellon also offers Client Omnibus and Client Segregated accounts in direct markets that have already made these account type choices available.
